The Fantasy Sports Writers Association is pleased to announce that Dave Richard and Nando Di Fino have been selected as the newest members of our Hall of Fame. We're also delighted to report that the pair heard the news together while recording the CBS Sports Fantasy Football Today . With the election of Richard and Di Fino, there are now 43 members of the FSWA Hall of Fame.

Richard has been a content creator at CBS Sports since 2005, where he is perhaps best known for producing the Cheat Sheet and Trade Values Chart. He has made countless radio and television appearances over the years, and, along with Jamey Eisenberg, he co-founded one of the fantasy industry's first podcasts. He is a two-time winner of FSWA writing awards (2008, 2013). Prior to joining CBS, he was a producer and writer for NFL.com. Richard is also one of the most approachable and supportive analysts in our industry.

Di Fino has helped launch successful fantasy operations at multiple platforms over the years, most recently as senior managing editor at The Athletic. He has produced content for many other outlets, including Anthem Sports & Entertainment, CBS Sports, ESPN, The Wall Street Journal, AOL and Talented Mr. Roto. Back in 2004, he was hired as a research assistant by Sam Walker during the writing of Fantasyland. Di Fino has guided and advanced the careers of a remarkable number of fantasy analysts over the past two decades.

We look forward to celebrating both Richard and Di Fino during the FSWA's annual awards show on SiriusXM Fantasy Sports Radio in February.
